EVA KIS, FEATURES EDITOR

Just as the world itself is renewed every spring, it's also your chance to experience a host of new exhibits and performances across the city. There's arguably no hotter scene than theater right now, led by the blockbuster openings of "Harry Potter and the Cursed Child" and "Frozen." But there's plenty more to see at the city's best new museum exhibits and art gallery shows, too. We've got your guide to it all.

JUDGE QUESTIONS TRUMP BLOCKING TWITTER USERS

IA federal judge on Thursday expressed skepticism about whether President Donald Trump can constitutionally block Twitter users whose views he does not like from following and responding to his own Twitter account. At a hearing in Manhattan federal court, U.S. District Judge Naomi Reice Buchwald asked Michael Baer, a lawyer with the U.S. Department of Justice arguing for Trump, whether letting the president bar users from @realDonaldTrump would violate their First Amendment free speech rights. She asked whether Twitter was different from a public town hall, where government officials would be unable to pull the plug from a microphone to mute speakers with unwelcome views. "Once it is a public forum, you can't shut somebody up because you don't like what they're saying," Buchwald said.

TRUMP WILL MEET NORTH KOREAN LEADER BY MAY

2President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un will meet by May, and Kim has pledged to refrain from nuclear or missile tests, South Korea's national security chief said on Thursday after briefing White House officials on talks between Seoul and Pyongyang. "Kim pledged that North Korea will refrain from any further nuclear or missile test," South Korea's National Security Office head Chung Eui-yong told reporters at the White House. "President Trump ... said he would meet Kim Jong Un by May," Chung said. Read more on page 12.

MANAFORT PLEADS NOT GUILTY, FACES JULY TRIAL

4 President Donald Trump's former campaign manager Paul Manafort again pleaded not guilty on Thursday to criminal charges in the investigation into alleged Russian meddling in the 2016 election and will face the first of two trials in July. Manafort pleaded not guilty in a Virginia courtroom to additional charges ranging from bank fraud to filing false tax returns that were brought by Robert Mueller, the U.S. special counsel for the Russia probe. Manafort also pleaded not guilty last week in Washington to related charges, including conspiracy to launder money and failing to register as a foreign agent for the Ukrainian government. District Judge T.S. Ellis, based in Alexandria, Virginia, on Thursday set a tentative trial date for July 10. Manafort's trial in Washington begins in September.

GOP SENATOR SAYS HE'LL TRY TO UNDO TARIFFS

5 Republican Sen. Jeff Flake said on Thursday he would introduce a law to nullify President Donald Trump's aluminum and steel tariffs, which Trump finalized in a proclamation earlier in the day. The Republican chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Orrin Hatch, also criticized the tariffs but said he would work with the White House to "mitigate the damage." Earlier, President Donald Trump set tariffs on steel and aluminum imports but exempted Canada and Mexico. Trump had pledged to slap tariffs on all countries, but strategists said Thursday's plan was milder than many investors expected. Other countries can apply for exemptions, according to the Trump administration, although details of when they would be granted were thin. "He dialed it back a little bit," said Michael O'Rourke, chief market strategist at Jones Trading.

Researchers issue call to arms to combat fake news

A large-scale scientific investigation is needed to look into how false stories spread and how we can fight it, experts from Harvard, MIT and more said Thursday.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

There's a revolution brewing to fight fake news — the only problem is, experts still don't know much about it.

That's why researchers from Harvard, MIT, Yale, Columbia University, Indiana University, Microsoft and more are now calling for a scientific investigation into fake news.

In a paper published Thursday in the journal Science, researchers from across the country are urging others — from computer scientists to historians to political experts to social scientists — to focus on fake news.

"What we did in this report is try and collate, 'Here's what we think we know,' and, 'Here's what we think we don't know,' where more research is needed," said Matthew Baum, one of the paper's authors and a professor at the Harvard Kennedy School.

"Ultimately, the purpose of this is a call to arms, for sure," he added. "But it wasn't just that, it was also [that] ... there are huge holes of things we don't know."

What do we know? According to the paper, which looked at other studies on fake news so far, experts estimate there are 60 million automated bots on Facebook and up to 48 million on Twitter.

"Fake news goes back forever," Baum said, noting it isn't just reserved for politics. He cited things like the anti-vaccination movement, how people thought fluoridated water was an instrument of mind control and rumors that misled the stock market as examples.

Researchers are calling for a large-scale scientific investigation into all things fake news. PIXABAY

What don't we know? Pretty much the whole scope of the problem.

"It's a concern that fake information is spreading around and persuading people and affecting attitudes, but we don't really know how much is out there, how many people are seeing it, how many people are having their opinions or behaviors affected by it," Baum said.

Why try to mobilize others on fake news now? The recent news about a Russian troll farm put a new spotlight on the issue, but that's not all.

"In the aftermath of the 2016 election and the rising cynicism about politics and our political institutions and distrust and polarization, this phenomenon seems to be adding fuel to that fire," Baum said.

Study: Fake news spreads faster than true stories on Twitter

"Fake news" isn't just an insult used in the president's tweets, — it's an epidemic that spreads faster than true stories, at least on Twitter, according to a report.

A study published Thursday by MIT scholars found false information travels faster on Twitter than real news, and it's not entirely the fault of bots.

Though these bots may originate the fake stories, it's real people who are spreading them, according to the study.

Fake news stories are 70 percent more likely to be retweeted than true stories, the researchers found, and it takes true stories six times as long to reach 1,500 people as it does for false stories to reach the same number.

These findings left researchers "somewhere between surprised and stunned," Deb Roy, co-author of the study and an MIT Media Lab professor, said in a statement. Researchers tracked about 126,000 "cascades," or unbroken retweet chains, of news stories spreading on Twitter between 2006 and 2017. These tweet chains were cumulatively tweeted over 4.5 million times by about 3 million people.

Why are people sharing false info more often? It may be because it's human nature to like new things.

"False news is more novel, and people are more likely to share novel information," said Sinan Aral, a co-author and professor at MIT Sloan, in a statement. He added, "People who share novel information are seen as being in the know." KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

For more than a century, International Women's Day has celebrated the social, economic, cultural and political achievements of women across the globe. And starting today through the rest of the month, some of New York City's most trailblazing female political activists will be honored at LinkNYC kiosks across the city.

The initiative is a collaboration between LinkNYC, the city's Department of Information Technology and Telecommunications (DoITT) and the Museum of the City of New York and not only commemorates this year's IWD, but also March being Women's History Month.

The women featured on the LinkNYC kiosks are included in the museum's "Beyond Suffrage: A Century of New York Women in Politics" exhibit, which runs through Aug. 5.

"During Women's History Month, we are proud to shine a light on prominent women who have positively impacted New York City and the entire nation," said Jen Hensley, president of LinkNYC. "Using Link's platform of digital displays throughout the five boroughs, we hope New Yorkers and visitors who walk by Links will get a window into the well-known and unsung heroes who have paved the way for women today."

Among those heroes are Alva Belmont, founder of the Political Equality Association in New York, journalist and civic activist Bessye Bearden, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who was a drafter of the Declaration of Sentiments, suffrage leader Mabel Lee and Sarah J.S. Tompkins Garnet, who founded the Equal Suffrage League in Brooklyn.

The museum's exhibit features photos, audio materials, garments and more to tell the stories of the city's female activists, and DoITT Commissioner Samir Saini

"We hope New Yorkers and visitors who walk by Links will get a window into the well-known and unsung heroes who have paved the way for women today."

LinkNYC President Jen Hensley

hopes that its partnership with LinkNYC "will inspire activism among all the people — male and female — of our city today," he said.

Whitney Donhauser, president of the Museum of City of New York, called the collaboration a "perfect match" that "will bring the story of women's activism in New York to life in unprecedented ways and make the inspiring history of 'Beyond Suffrage' accessible for even more New Yorkers, tourists and visitors."

More than 1,300 LinkNYC kiosks can be found across the five boroughs, and thousands more will be deployed in the coming years.

New female-centric co-working space coming to Williamsburg

The XX House is slated to open this summer at 61 N. 11th St. in North Williamsburg.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
nikki.mascali@metro.us

Women-only co-working and social spaces are growing in popularity across the country, especially in New York City.

For example, The Wing has expanded to three locations in just two years, including its first Brooklyn space, which launched Feb. 26. And come this summer, women will also have the option of joining another co-working community in the borough when The XX House is slated to open on the top floor of a converted three-story warehouse at 61 N. 11th St. in North Williamsburg.

The XX House was created by Rachel Vestergaard, Allison Rapson and Cassidy Brown, founders of the female-focused creative agency and production studio We Are the XX.

"We are building an elegant space architected for women to thrive on every level, embrace their leadership and amplify their creative prowess," Vestergaard said in a statement about the 15,479-square-foot spot the women leased this week.

"Williamsburg has been our home base for years, and there is no better neighborhood in the world to launch the headquarters for The XX House," added Brown.

"There will be an application process not to be elitist, but to form the culture that is the right fit."

Wendy Maitland

Slated to open in the third quarter of 2018, The XX House will feature wood floors, 18-foot ceilings, skylights, views of Manhattan and a roof deck.

Membership info for The XX House is forthcoming, but Wendy Maitland, who represented We Are the XX in the deal, told Commercial Observer that "there will be an application process not to be elitist, but to form the culture that is the right fit."

The culture, Maitland added, will allow men, but membership will only be open to women.

The rest of the vacant warehouse acquired by CW Realty Management will be converted into a "lifestyle-orientated" mixed-use property that will include commercial and retail space.

Corey Horowitz of Lee & Associates, who represented CW Realty, called the deal with The XX House "one of the largest office signings in Williamsburg in many years."

The founders of female-focused creative agency We Are the XX will open a women-only co-working and creative space in Williamsburg this summer. Above is a rendering of the three-story warehouse being converted into a mixed-use space. PROVIDED

City speeds up heat repairs after NYCHA state-of-emergency threat

The city is fast-tracking upgrades to heating systems in New York City Housing Authority developments, officials announced on Thursday — a move that came after Gov. Andrew Cuomo said he would declare a state of emergency over NYCHA conditions.

In January, Mayor Bill de Blasio announced a $200 million investment to replace boilers and upgrade heating systems in 20 NYCHA developments which were experiencing "chronic outages." The upgrades would be rolled out over three years.

Speaking on NY1 on Wednesday, Cuomo said he would implement "a real resolution" to cut that timeline.

"We're going to do an emergency declaration," he said. "We're going to get this done in a very creative way and God forbid we don't need the federal government to come in here and tell us how to run our housing."

Cuomo added that NYCHA is "in a crisis" and he stands with the residents demanding improvements.

Following that interview, the de Blasio administration announced it would speed up the heating system repairs. The city identified several ways fast-track the process, according to a statement, which will save 12 to 15 months of work.

"Our investment in new heating systems goes right to the heart of the biggest problems NYCHA residents face," de Blasio said in a statement. "We are cutting through red tape to expedite these critically needed repairs for tenants, and urge our state partners to do the same by authorizing design-build immediately."

To speed things up, the city will review fewer design submissions and aims to award contracts ahead of NYCHA board approval.

"This interagency partnership is about looking at how we can all work smarter and more collaboratively in support of New York City residents," said NYCHA Chair and CEO Shola Olatoye in a statement. "With the Mayor's investment and commitments from our city agency partners, we are able to bring better quality heat service to 45,000 New Yorkers much faster." KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Will this secret Seychelles meeting be the undoing of President Trump?

Special counsel Robert Mueller flipped someone who was there, and he wants to know why Russia and a Trump rep were too.

MICHAEL MARTIN

President Vladimir Putin.

The information came to special counsel Robert Mueller via an adviser to the crown prince of the United Arab Emirates, George Nader, who attended the meeting. He is now cooperating with the investigation and has testified before a grand jury, the Times has reported.

Why is the Seychelles meeting bad?

When could a business meeting on a tropical island in the Indian Ocean possibly be a bad thing? When it might be evidence that a foreign power interfered in the U.S. election, with the Trump campaign's cooperation, funneling money from foreign countries into a presidential campaign. All of the above are illegal.

If evidence of Trump-Russian collusion emerges from the meeting, it would rebut more than a year of denials from the Trump administration, making it difficult if not impossible for even the president's staunchest Republican supporters to argue that his presidency should continue.

The Trump representative who attended the meeting was Blackwater founder Erik Prince, who served as an informal adviser to the Trump campaign, the Times reported, citing three sources. (Trump named Prince's sister, Betsy DeVos, to be secretary of

Your online anti-Trump sentiments are being tracked by this wiki

Think you couldn't be more uneasy about life under the Trump administration? Well, tell someone to hold your beer. A new wiki is tracking people who express anti-Trump sentiments online.

KeyWiki is a trove of more than 100,000 articles, most of them profiles of progressives. The organizers say the site's aim is to "expose the political left in America by unlocking the covert side of U.S. and global politics." To that end, it's publishing online dossiers on people who post negative things about President Trump, join anti-Trump online groups or even align with groups whom it perceives to be left-leaning, reported Claire Downs of The Daily Dot.

Meet the founder of KeyWiki, Trevor Loudon who has loudly warned against the encroachment of Communism since the 1980s. His willingness to embrace conspiracy theories makes Alex Jones look like a scientific methodist: He's published a book called "Barack Obama and the Enemies Within," in which he claimed the former president had a staff of Marxists who were plotting "a coordinated attempt to overthrow capitalism."

Loudon created KeyWiki in 2010 to "start profiles on 35,000 people" that he believed were "dragging America down," he said. "We've got congressmen in there, 'peace' activists, labor unionists, black radicals, 'religious' socialists, 'greenies,' left-wing academics, Obama appointees and thousands of card-carrying socialists and communists," he wrote on a site called World News Weekend.

education.) Representing Vladimir Putin was Kirill Dmitriev, manager of a Russian fund that was sanctioned by the U.S. in 2015. Emirati officials believed Prince was officially speaking for the Trump transition team.

Mueller is investigating what occurred at the meeting, and if money from the Emirates or Russia made its way into the Trump presidential effort. “Mr. Nader’s cooperation in the special counsel’s investigation could prompt new legal risks for the Trump administration, and Mr. Nader’s presence at the Seychelles meeting appears to connect him to the primary focus of Mr. Mueller’s investigation: examining Russian interference during the 2016 presidential campaign,” said the Times.

The meeting was known to American intelligence last year, but it mystified them until Nader provided the details. During testimony before Congress last fall, Erik Prince denied representing the Trump transition team. He said his interaction with Dmitriev was just a casual hang over a drink. Representatives for Nader, Dmitriev and the Emirati ambassador haven’t commented.

What does KeyWiki post?

KeyWiki publishes information about progressives that can border on doxxing and outright falsehoods. The site has published the addresses of elderly people who attended civil rights protests decades ago; among other tools, it apparently uses automated Facebook scrapers to collect information on people who are signed up for progressive groups like Black Lives Matter, the Dot reported.

“If you’re not on a list, then you’re not doing it right.”

A user of the /r/socialism subreddit

When it comes to public figures, muddying the waters is an apparent strategy: Legitimate facts and even praise for liberal leaders is mixed with right-wing editorializing. For example, Kamala Harris’ profile begins with a straightforward rundown of her career achievements and summary of a reformed-prisoner program she oversaw that swerves into disparaging gossip about her relationship with Willie Brown and her motivation for running for California district attorney. The page layout mimics Wikipedia’s, and KeyWiki profiles are rising in search-engine rankings.

Facebook hasn’t commented on the wiki. On the subreddit /r/socialism, a poster who said he found several friends on KeyWiki (but not himself, likely because he isn’t on Facebook) advised not waiting for the social network to take action. “My first reaction was this: If you’re not on a list, then you’re not doing it right. But I don’t think this is something we should just shrug off. Let’s not make things any easier for [KeyWiki],” he wrote. “Talk to your groups about security culture. Start reading subs like /r/privacy. ... Learn about encryption. ... Most importantly, move your organizations — and your personal lives — slowly but surely away from companies like Facebook and Google that do not care about your privacy.”

New York plan puts spotlight on graying of US prison population

Does it make financial and moral sense to keep elderly people in prison? The state of New York is asking that question this month, and the debate there should be a harbinger of a much-needed national conversation.

The American prison population is getting older. The number of prisoners serving longer sentences has risen, and there has been an increase in admissions of older people, according to a 2016 study by the U.S. Department of Justice. Eleven percent of the U.S. state and federal prison population was over age 55 in 2016.

That translates to roughly 160,000 people — and 38,000 people over age 65. The American Prison reform advocates say the plan is a step in the right direction but does not go far enough. Release Aging People in Prison (RAPP), a New York-based advocacy group, estimates the Cuomo plan would affect fewer than 1,000 prisoners, because it excludes some people based on their crime, no matter how ill they might be. "It guarantees that some people will die in prison, no matter what their condition," said Laura Whitehorn, a formerly incarcerated woman who is now an organizer with the group.

That is where this issue gets difficult. The national debate about ending mass incarceration often focuses on reducing arrest and

"It guarantees that some people will die in prison, no matter what their condition."

Laura Whitehorn, a formerly incarcerated woman

Civil Liberties Union projects that by 2030, more than one-third of the U.S. prison population will be over age 55 — more than 400,000 people.

In 2015 to 2016, the cost of healthcare in New York State prisons totaled $380.6 million, up 20 percent from three years earlier. States bear the entire cost of prisoners' healthcare, since the incarcerated are not eligible to participate in Medicaid, which is funded jointly by the states and federal government.

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo has proposed a "geriatric parole" program for prisoners over age 55 as part of a broader criminal justice reform plan that is under discussion as part of the state's budget process this year. Prisoners who suffer from serious illness and cannot take care of themselves would be eligible for the program if they have served at least half of their sentences. Those convicted of murder or aggravated murder, and inmates serving life without parole, would not be eligible.

incarceration of nonviolent drug offenders. But the elderly prison population is composed largely of violent offenders.

Very few older prisoners commit crimes after they are released. In New York state, just 5 percent of released prisoners aged 50 to 64 return to prison for new offenses; among those aged 65 or higher, the rate of new offense is just six-tenths of 1 percent. Among offenders convicted of murder, just 1.9 percent committed new crimes following release from 1985 to 2012, according to state data.

In New York, the prison population fell 17 percent from 2007 through 2016 to about 52,000, according to a report last year by the New York state comptroller. At the same time, the number of inmates aged 50 or higher rose by 46 percent, to more than 10,000. The report does not cite specific figures for the cost of healthcare for older inmates, but overall healthcare expenses for the state's prison population in 2015-2016 were 20 percent higher than three years earlier. Official says Trump ready to meet North Korea's Kim Jong Un by May Trump's aides have been wary of North Korea's diplomatic overtures because of its history of reneging on international commitments.

Officials say President Trump is willing to meet with Kim Jong Un. GETTY IMAGES

President Donald Trump on Thursday expressed a willingness to meet North Korean leader Kim Jong Un by May in response to Kim's invitation to hold the first meeting between leaders of the U.S. and North Korea, a South Korean envoy said.

Kim has committed to "denuclearization" and to suspending nuclear or missile tests, South Korea's National Security Office head Chung Eui-yong told reporters at the White House after briefing Trump on South Korean officials' meeting with Kim on Monday.

A meeting between Kim and Trump, who have exchanged bellicose insults in the past year that have raised fear of war, would mark a dramatic breakthrough in efforts to resolve the tense standoff over North Korea's effort to develop a nuclear-tipped missile capable of hitting the U.S. mainland.

"I told him [Trump] that in our meeting that North Korean leader Kim Jong Un said that he's committed to denuclearization," Chung said. "Kim pledged that North Korea will refrain from any further nuclear or missile tests."

"President Trump appreciated the briefing and said he would meet Kim Jong Un by May to achieve denuclearization," he said.

Chung and National Intelligence Service chief Suh Hoon flew to Washington on Thursday to explain North Korea's stance on possible future talks with the U.S. and the prospect of Pyongyang suspending nuclear tests if the security of the North's government is assured. REUTERS

So-called Drano bombs are now making a comeback — and it's scary

They might not be as damaging as devices made with metal fragments and pressure cookers, but a type of homemade bomb called the Drano bomb that's been used to prank people for decades is making a comeback.

And it's all thanks to the viral nature of social media sites like YouTube and Facebook.

The Drano bomb — a type of bottle bomb also known as a "works bomb" — is made with household items like (without going into too much detail) plastic bottles (obviously) and some sort of household cleaner such as Drano (again, obviously, from the name).

Again, without going into too much detail, the idea behind a bottle bomb, or Drano bomb, is essentially to use common household items to create a strong chemical reaction. This type of chemical reaction creates gases, which in turn create pressure within the bottle. Once it builds up enough pressure it ruptures, resulting in an explosion.

And it's scaring some unsuspecting homeowners throughout the Northeast. A Hudson, N.H., homeowner spotted two bottle bombs in his yard in September 2017 — just months after a Maryland homeowner spotted similar bombs in his yard.

Bottle bombs and the Drano bomb apparently making a comeback might not be deadly, but they can cause serious burns and injuries.

A few people in

Harlem — including a 12-year-old child — were injured when bottle bombs exploded in the area over two days in May 2017.

"I'm walking and then I just heard this big boom. It sounded like an M-80," Nicky Ramos told ABC7 of the Sprite bottle explosion that was caught on tape. "And then I just felt liquid all over me."

"It hurts when I'm sleeping because the bandages still pull on the wounds, so it feels like my skin is getting pulled off," another bottle bomb victim told the news station.

"My main issue is to get the word out so, being aware of this new chemical bomb these children are creating copying off YouTube," the 12-year-old's mother told ABC7.

So just don't try this at home — and don't be afraid to call police if you find one (just don't pick it up). MEAGAN MORRIS

From exploring the impact of one of the greatest American painters to highlighting the work of an overlooked feminist artist, New York City's museums are kicking off the season of renewal with something for everyone. LAKSHMI GANDHI

Public Parks, Private Gardens: Paris to Provence

There's no better way to celebrate spring than exploring the beauty of French parks and gardens. Paris' bountiful public gardens have long served as social hubs, with artists also finding inspiration in the scenery around them throughout the 19th century as the Impressionist and Naturalist movements began to emerge. The Metropolitan Museum of Art's Public Parks, Private Gardens: Paris to Provence will feature more than 150 works by 70 artists, including Henri Matisse, these images also nod to the Met's own setting of Central Park. March 12-July 9, Metropolitan Museum of Art, 1000 Fifth Ave., metmuseum.org

PAUL MPAGI SEPUYA

Being

What does it mean to be human? That's question explored at the Museum of Modern Art's photography show Being. Using images from around the world, Being asks visitors to explore the definition of human rights and responsibilities, while also considering the threats to both of those things globally. The exhibition is part of MoMA's renowned New Photography series, which highlights artists who have never been exhibited in the museum before, including emerging names like Paul Mpagi Sepuya and Yazan Khalili. March 18-Aug. 19, 11 W. 53rd St., moma.org

Rockwell, Roosevelt & the Four Freedoms

There's probably no American artist more closely associated with World War II than Norman Rockwell, whose paintings of everyday life in the United States resonate more than seven decades later. In an expansive exhibition, Rockwell, Roosevelt & The Four Freedoms, the New-York Historical Society highlights his paintings depicting FDR's reasoning for entering the war: defending the American ideals of freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom from want and freedom from fear. Visitors can also explore the political and socioeconomic themes of the era. Art lovers should also embrace the chance to see legendary Rockwell works like the original Rosie the Riveter painting and "The Problem We All Live With," the 1963 work which depicts 6-year-old Ruby Bridges desegregating her New Orleans elementary school. May 25-Sept. 2, 170 Central Park West, nyhistory.org

NORMAN ROCKWELL MUSEUM

Mel Chin: All Over The Place

The Queens Museum's Mel Chin: All Over The Place will be true to its name, popping up beyond the Queens Museum at Times Square and the Broadway-Lafayette subway station. Environmental issues, injustice and socioeconomic status are the big themes that have influenced conceptual artist Mel Chin over the past 40 years, and all three will be readily apparent in the project Flint Fit, which will transform empty water bottles from Flint, Michigan, into thread and fabric that designer Tracy Reese (a Michigan native) will use to create a clothing line that will be produced by a women's sewing collective in Flint. April 8-Aug. 12, Flushing Meadows-Corona Park, queensmuseum.org

BRANDON SCOTT

SARA RAHBAR

Surface/Depth

For nearly a century, Miriam Schapiro was a groundbreaking feminist artist, particularly in the Pattern and Decoration movement. Though she died in 2015 at the age of 91, the curators at the Museum of Art and Design say her contributions to the contemporary art world have never been properly acknowledged. Surface/Depth aims to change that through its in-depth exploration of Schapiro's work — particularly the creations she called "femmage," a combination of painting, collage and other domestic arts and craft forms that have been traditionally marginalized for being largely the realm of female artisans. March 22-Sept. 9, 2 Columbus Circle, madmuseum.org

JINYUN JEON

The Senses: Design Beyond Vision

Design has always been about more than color or form — texture, smell and range of functionality have as much a part to play in an object's appeal. The modern world is also becoming a more accessible place for the differently abled, offering a whole new challenge for designers. The Senses: Design Beyond Vision at the Cooper Hewitt Design Museum does just what it says: Visitors will walk through interactive installations and handle products that "enhance life for all." April 13-Oct. 28, 2 E. 91st St., cooperhewitt.org

Broadway's biggest openings... and the next best thing

Four major shows based on hit movies are taking over Broadway theaters this spring, so getting tickets will be tough. Luckily, these shows all have complementary productions to also take in. T. MICHELLE MURPHY

If you can't see "Harry Potter," try "Admissions"

It's been 11 years since the last "Harry Potter" book was published, but 19 have gone by in "Cursed Child," which opens April 22.

You probably already know that, having rushed out to devour the script when it was published, to see how our spell-casting protagonists are coping with their pasts and how the fallout impacts their own young wizards.

However, seeing it will take some time. The play is split into two parts, and tickets sell out almost immediately each time they're released.

However, you can watch a muggle parent wrestle with the consequences of her actions in "Admissions" (March 12). A mother faces a dilemma as she fights for a more equitable admissions policy at her school, which blows back on her own son.

If you can't see "Mean Girls," try "The Boys in the Band"

Yes, "Mean Girls" is going to bring all of your favorite one-liners to the stage, with a "fetch" score and all-new Queen Bees attached, with a script by Tina Fey, who also wrote the movie. Choosing this one for girls' night out is a sure bet — but if you're looking for something that takes social climbing to the next level, throw some real shade with the queens of "The Boys in the Band" (May 31).

This snarky play, one of our earliest "gay plays" from the 1960s, isn't actually a musical, so don't let the name fool you. But the cast cachet more than makes up for it with Zachary Quinto, Andrew Rannells, Jim Parsons and Matt Bomer.

If you can't see "Frozen," try "Flight"

Disney's best-selling animated feature officially joins "The Lion King" and "Aladdin" on Broadway on March 22. The film's composers are back and have doubled the number of songs. The stage adaptation also delves deeper into the family dynamics between Elsa and Anna — if possible, with even more heart.

But it's also one of today's hottest tickets. If you like the themes but are willing to leave the fantasy behind, try "Flight" at the McKittrick Hotel (through April 8). Rather than Arendelle princesses, it follows poor immigrant brothers trying to make their way in a world that won't accept differentness.

More visual art than theater, the show isolates participants in private viewing booths for a storytelling experience they aren't likely to forget anytime soon.

If you can't see "Angels in America," try "Children of a Lesser God"

Tony Kushner's Pulitzer-winning play about the AIDS crisis, "Angels in America," returns to the stage (March 25) at a time when its themes could not be more relevant. But it's also a tough ticket to get, with the show has been split into two parts (7.5 hours total) and Nathan Lane and Andrew Garfield starring.

However, you can score tickets to "Children of a Lesser God" (April 11). A much shorter revival, starring Joshua Jackson and Lauren Ridloff, it's about a teacher and janitor who fall in love at a school for the deaf in the midst of controversy. It raises similar questions about how to love under scrutiny and with greater values at stake.

Between the Waters

With the South African city of Cape Town perilously close to shutting off residential water supplies because of a three-year drought, the Whitney Museum's Between the Waters exhibit couldn't be more timely. Seven artists from around the world take on our modern water crisis through various media, drawing on traditions from Southern handicrafts to 16th-century architecture. Opens March 9, 99 Gansevoort St., whitney.org

Lyrical Abstraction

Abstract art takes the world and turns it into diaphanous impressions, more to create emotions than convey what the artist is seeing. Agora Gallery explores a range of artists working in this style with Lyrical Abstraction, from Japanese artist Hiroko Saigusa whose painting "The 60s" embodies the joy and power of the iconic Flower Power movement, to naturalist painter Alexandra Verbeek, who whose paintings of nature aim to connect us with our primal instincts. March 13-April 3, Agora Gallery, 530 W. 25th St., agora-gallery.com

Queenie

Female artists take center stage in Queenie at the Hunter East Harlem Gallery. The exhibition takes its name from a piece by Alessandra Exposito, who painted a horse's skull pink and decorated it with feminine symbols. Each of the works illustrates themes of what it means to live in a sexist world and the evolving way gender is viewed. March 21-June 23, Hunter East Harlem Gallery, 2180 Third Ave., huntereastharlemgallery.org

What We Ask Is Simple

This exhibition of artist

Hank Willis Thomas' work could not be timelier. In What We Ask Is Simple, Thomas connects the American protest movements of recent years to historical movements in Africa, Europe and previous uprisings here at home. The works also make it a point to return to photography's roots during an era where digital images dominate, using old-school techniques like silvering and halftone screen printing. March 29-May 12, Jack Shaiman Gallery, 513 W. 20th St., jackshaiman.com

Through A Different Lens

Film enthusiasts may be surprised to learn that before he directed classic films such as "Spartacus" and "A Space Odyssey," Stanley Kubrick worked as a photographer for Look magazine. The future filmmaker was just 17 when he began his photography career in 1945, but his unique style was already apparent in the images he created. In addition to exploring Kubrick's early art, Through A Different Lens at the Museum of the City of New York also offers a glimpse of life in New York City just after World War II. Opens May 3, 1220 Fifth Ave., mcny.org

Step inside David Lynch's mind

One of the strangest and most riveting creators of our time is bringing his Festival of Disruption to NYC.

KATE MOONEY
kate.mooney@metro.us

David Lynch fans were in for a treat this summer when "Twin Peaks: The Return"—the 18-part, utterly bonkers and beautiful sort-of sequel to cult 90's favorite "Twin Peaks"—aired on Showtime. Now, East Coast Lynchians can get another dose of the director's signature strange on May 19 and 20, when Lynch brings his Festival of Disruption to Brooklyn Steel, Rolling Stone reports.

The man himself will be in attendance for this multimedia event, which he's hosted in L.A. for the past two years (this is its first iteration on the East Coast). The two-day festival raises money for the David Lynch Foundation, the director's nonprofit that brings the practice of transcendental meditation to veterans suffering from PTSD, domestic violence victims and underserved youth worldwide.

The Brooklyn Steel lineup, curated by Lynch, features a screening of "Blue Velvet" followed by a Q&A with Isabella Rossellini; performances by Angel Olsen (solo), Jim James of My Morning Jacket, and Animal Collective; and art exhibits featuring works by Lynch, William Eggleston and

Sandro Miller, whose "Psychogenic Fugue" presents photos of John Malkovich posing as Lynch characters, from Dale Cooper of "Twin Peaks" to the Mystery Man of "Lost Highway."

The event also includes transcendental meditation led by David Lynch Foundation executive director Bob Roth and featuring Brian Eno's ambient album "Reflection"; and a pop-up by jewelry designers and event sponsors Alex and Ani, selling Lynch's "Meditating Eye" bracelets and charms, with 20 percent profits going to the foundation.

MLS must prepare for bull rush from red side of New York

Previewing the New York Red Bull's 2018 campaign before their season opener on Sunday.

joseph.pantorno@metro.us

There was plenty of reasons for optimism at the end of the 2017 season for the New York Red Bulls.

Despite finishing sixth in the Eastern Conference, they thrashed the Chicago Fire in the first round of the playoffs before taking eventual champions Toronto FC to the wire, playing them to a 2-2 draw that saw the Canadians move on thanks to the away-goal rule.

New York reloaded this offseason and are prepared to make a push toward the top of the conference after acquiring Alejandro Romero Gamarra (a.k.a. Kaku) to join Daniel Royer and Bradley Wright-Phillips in attack.

The Argentinian will further add to an aggressive Red Bulls side that will wreak havoc on plenty of opponents with their pressing style of play.

On top of that, New York has developing youngsters in midfielder Tyler Adams and defender Aaron Long that could help catapult the Red Bulls up the standings.

X-FACTOR

BRADLEY WRIGHT-PHILLIPS

New York's aggressive attack is going to be led by Wright-Phillips, who will be alone as the central striker.

Last season saw Wright-Phillips rank seventh in MLS with 17 goals after leading the league in 2016 with 24 tallies.

He's no spring chicken at 32 years old, but he'll be plenty dangerous.

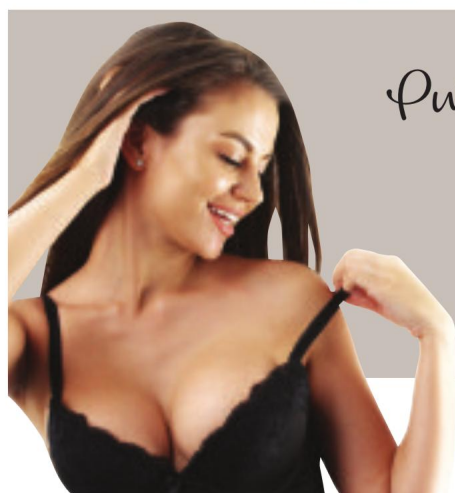

NEWCOMER TO WATCH

ALEJANDRO "KAKU" GAMARRA

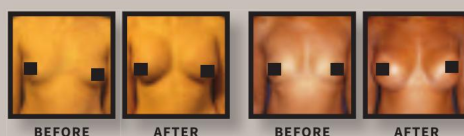

While Wright-Phillips provides wisdom in the Red Bulls' attack, Kaku brings added youth and explosive potential from the midfield.

At 23 years old, Kaku helped Huracan gain promotion in the Primera Division four years ago, recording eight goals and 13 assists in all competitions.

Giants crossing off two pressing needs

Big Blue is on the verge of picking up help on defense and along the offensive line.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

New York Giants general manager Dave Gettleman isn't wasting much time bettering his roster during his first few months with the organization.

Just a day after reports emerged that a deal for offensive lineman Andrew Norwell was "done," Gettleman traded a 2018 fourth- and sixth-round pick to the Los Angeles Rams for linebacker Alec Ogletree.

Norwell, who is expected to become the highest-paid offensive lineman in the NFL, was signed by Gettleman and the Carolina Panthers as an undrafted free agent in 2014. He has developed into a solid left guard, earning AP first-team All-Pro honors in 2017 which will be a welcome addition to a Giants offensive line that was horrendous last year.

Ogletree will help bolster the Giants linebacking corps, which experienced its fair share of injuries last year.

The 26-year-old is a serious upgrade at the position though. Ogletree has as many 100-tackle seasons (three) since 2013 than any Giants player during that span.

The trade cannot be made official until Mar. 14.

Bridgewater an option should Jets miss Cousins

The NFL world is impatiently waiting for March 14, which ushers in the start of free agency and the official commencement of the Kirk Cousins sweepstakes.

The former Washington Redskins quarterback, who has put up over 4,000 passing yards in each of the last three seasons, is the crown jewel of this season's free agency class and will be pursued by a number of teams desperate to acquire a franchise quarterback.

One of those teams is the New York Jets, who have not hidden the fact that they are willing to do anything it takes to get Cousins. Even if that means paying him $60 million in the first year of his contract.

With around $100 million in cap space this offseason, the Jets automatically become a favorite for Cousins' signature, and it was reported that they were one of the two teams the 29-year-old was deciding between along with the Minnesota Vikings. On Wednesday though, Bovada LV released updated odds for Cousins' landing spot and the Jets were third behind the Vikings and the Denver Broncos.

It's understandable if Cousins turns down an astronomical amount of money and signs with either Denver or Minnesota considering they are in better positions to win now, compared to the rebuilding Jets.

Should that happen, the Jets could try and attain a franchise quarterback with the No. 6 pick of the 2018 NFL Draft or they could scour the market for the next-best option.

One of those could be Teddy Bridgewater, who is set to become a free agent after injuries robbed him of the starting job with the Vikings. After a horrific knee injury during the 2016 preseason, Bridgewater has appeared in just one game over the last two seasons as Minnesota cycled from Sam Bradford to Case Keenum and were still able to make the NFC Championship game in January.

Despite his deep playoff run, it looks as though Keenum won't be returning to Minnesota either as the team did not place the franchise tag on the pending free agent. With Bradford also set to hit free agency, it looks as though the Vikings are making Cousins priority No. 1 this offseason.

In his one full year in the NFL in which he started all 16 games, Bridgewater showed flashes of becoming a very good quarterback, completing 65.3-percent of his passes for 3,231 yards and 14 touchdowns during his age 23 season in 2015. That kind of upside could make him a very attractive target.

The Jets are reportedly already considering Bridgewater, per SNY's Ralph Vacchiano, but it is unclear where he lands on the team's list of desired passers.

Along with Cousins, Bradford and Keenum, Drew Brees, Brock Osweiler and A.J. McCarron are also free-agent quarterback options.

Aries Search for a new way to put your skills to good use. Revising your resume or offering a service that is needed in your community is a good place to begin.

Taurus Take care of personal finances, or medical or legal matters. If you depend on someone else to speak on your behalf, you will not get the outcome you hope for.

Gemini Anger will mount if you feel you are being picked on. Before you point the finger at someone else, look inward and consider what's being said and questioned.

Cancer Words can hurt. Think before you speak, and don't bring emotional or personal matters into a discussion at work. Your actions will determine how others view you.

Leo Personal changes will result in added benefits. What you do to improve your performance will not go unnoticed. You'll make remarkable advances if your motives are clear.

Virgo Keep busy, live up to your promises and don't disagree with a partner or someone you live with. Be positive or put an incentive in place when asking for approval.

Libra If you sit on the sidelines, you will have no one to blame but yourself if things don't go your way. Make a difference by choosing to speak up.

Scorpio Avoid an incident that could affect your income by fulfilling your promises and finishing what you start. Being responsible will make a difference at the end of the day.

Sagittarius Examine what's being said or the actions someone takes. Manipulative tactics will push you out of your comfort zone. Don't fret when you can do something about it.

Capricorn Be careful when dealing with people from your past. Offer suggestions when asked for help, but don't take control. Take care of your needs first.

Aquarius An energetic approach to work, money and getting ahead will pay off. Your enthusiasm and ability to get things done will be impressive and lead to greater prospects.

Pisces The power of persuasion is against you today. Don't give in to someone's enthusiasm for a product or pursuit. Plan to invest in yourself, not in someone else. EUGENIA LAST
